

chain-orientational disorder

in polymer crystals

Structural disorder resulting from the statistical coexistence within the crystals of identical chains with opposite orientations. A typical example is provided by the up-down statistical coexistence of anticlined chains in the same crystal structure.

Source:

Purple Book, p. 80